

Three generations. A broken oath. A coalfield that falls silent.

Voßlohe, 1905: in the great strike the young hewer Wilhelm Kortmann breaks the solidarity – he betrays his buddy to save his own family, and rises. On that betrayal everything the family later has is built.

Across three generations the fault is hauled up with the coal – through war, dictatorship, forced labour and the dying of the pits – until in 1989, as the last shift closes the shaft, his granddaughter Marga must decide what a century of silence is worth.
